The inside story of how tiny hedge fund Engine No. 1 reshaped Exxon's board

Though it owns just 0.02% of the company, the fund convinced big investors to vote for three new board members with backgrounds in clean energy. But will they be able to actually change how Exxon operates?

Mistra Center for Sustainable Markets

Misum is a multi-disciplinary research environment at the Stockholm School of Economics. Our scholars come from different departments and centers of the school and our research projects are designed to systematically explore how management and governance mechanisms may best advance market towards sustainability.

Misum aims to produce rigorous knowledge on sustainable markets that is internationally recognised and relevant to different stakeholder groups: academics, companies, NGOs, politicians, international stakeholders and individuals. We use different scientific methods, and work both qualitatively and quantitatively. Our projects are clustered around 3 platforms and one cross-platform initiative and often include collaboration with other institutions.
